Ship Jane Burrill Arrived

Manila.

Spanish Fleet.

PRAISE FOR OUR ADMIRAL

Did All He Could to Protect English
Merchantmen, Declares
This British Skipper.

Three deck house windows on the British ship Jane Burrill, which arrived here yesterday from Manila, were shattered by the attack on the Spanish fleet. The ship was anchored in the upper bay yesterday after a voyage of one hundred and thirty-three days from Manila. She was in Manila Harbor on May 1, when Admiral Dewey destroyed the Spanish fleet. Concussion, caused by the rapid American fire, smashed the Jane Burrill's windows.

The Jane Burrill, on the morning of May 1, was anchored some two miles off the city of Manila in Manila Bay. Five miles to the eastward across the bay frowned the guns of Cavite. Near the Burrill were six other British full rigged ships, including the Genista, Dalmatin, Austria, Ancon, J. V. Troop and Honolulu. Two miles to the northward of this little fleet was a small fort that faced the bay and supplied with six guns. The merchantmen were right in the range of these guns, though too far away to be struck by the guns of Cavite.

Captain William Robertson, the seasoned commander of the Jane Burrill, described the attack as follows: "All the American shipping had been ordered from the harbor three days before the attack by Admiral Dewey. The American merchantmen were given twenty-four hours to leave and all the ships had departed by April 26. There was not an American ship in the harbor when Dewey's ships came in."

"It was a complete surprise to us—the arrival of the American squadron, and it was a complete surprise to the Spaniards. I had been hearing the loading of my vessel, and two lighters were along-side laden with hemp bales. The native longshoremen were still at work."

"Not a gun was fired at the Americans as they slowly steamed through the channel to the north of Corregidor Island. This was a mistake, while the south channel is three miles wide, the north channel is three times that width. The ships, in single file, steamed straight for Cavite fort, and were situated on an island and partially protected by a point of land that jutted out into the bay."

"The Americans were ships steamed around this point and landed in toward the fort close enough to get a good range. Then the leading ship, I think it was the Maine, let go with her big guns. The other ships followed. It was only after the poor marksmanship of the Spaniards became manifest that the American squadron estimated their broadsides and let drive with every available gun, as the ships circled to port, and then made a second circle, this time closer in."

"At the first fire the natives at work on the Jane Burrill hurried into their boats and made for the shore as fast as possible. That was the last I saw of them. The Americans hammered away for two hours and then they withdrew to a point on the west side of the bay and north of Corregidor Island to eat breakfast."

"I certainly was one of the coolest of affairs that ever happened. They went at it as if it was the most ordinary thing in the world to smash a fleet of war ships and a world into atoms. The fire of the Americans was like a continuous explosion of fireworks. Not a single Spanish ship followed the American squadron across the bay."

"After breakfast the Americans sailed in to the fort, and it took about three hours. I should judge that the last shot was fired at about 11 o'clock. The Spaniards never left the positions they occupied when the Americans first opened fire. The Spanish war ships were sunk in those same positions. At low water it is possible to board any of the wrecked ships for their decks are then high out of the water. They lie close together and not scattered as many correspondents have said."

"It is not true that Admiral Dewey's ships sought refuge behind the merchant shipping in the harbor. The American ships never came near the British sailing vessels at anchor, but when the American war ships were withdrawing across the bay for breakfast the small fort opened fire on them. The shots fired by the five or six guns of this fort passed over the mastsheads of the seven merchantmen and dropped in the water."

"Admiral Dewey said word that if any of the merchant vessels was struck he would shell the city, and the shore battery opened business very suddenly."

"Admiral Dewey did all he could for the protection of the British merchant vessels. When the Spanish fleet was destroyed the day after the fight I sent him to the flag ship and he was treated by the surgeon there free of cost."

"After the destruction of the Spanish fleet I found that Manila had been closed to all traffic and it was not possible to get any mail or news. Three days after the fight Admiral Dewey ordered the merchantmen to move over toward Cavite and anchor."

CHICAGO CLAIMS MAN SPANIARDS CAUGHT

Detectives Ask Governor Voorhees for Requisition Papers for a Cuban.

Trenton, Oct. 4.—Detective Sumner, of Chicago, appeared before Acting Governor Voorhees today with a request for requisition papers for Marcos Morales, a Cuban now in jail in Camden on the charge of grand larceny. Morales, it is said, is a well-known filibuster and that the Spanish Government offered a reward at one time for his capture.

He stripped a Chicago flat of its furniture and brought it to Philadelphia, to which city he was taken by a freight car, but eluded them and escaped to Camden, N. J., where he was finally arrested.

Governor Voorhees said that if Governor Tanner, of Illinois, did not order the requisition withdrawn by October 17, he would issue an order for Morales to be extradited.

The woman carried her seven-months babe in her arms. She told the sorrowing wife that it was a pity to the community that she should be so cruel to her husband. ## GEORGE GOULD, DR. TONY.---$42,000.

Court of Appeals Decides
That He Owe the State
That Sum.

FATHER'S WILL WRONG.

Judges Declare He Could Not Legally Settle a Debt
by Bequest.

AMOUNT OF IT WAS $5,000,000.

The Young Multi-Millionaire Contended
That It Was for Salary
Due Him for Ten Years.

Albany, Oct. 4.—Former Senator David B. Hill won a notable legal victory to-day when the Court of Appeals decided in the case of the State against George J. Gould. Incidentally the State is richer by $42,000. The decision is particularly interesting in this tax-dodging era, where every tax not levied on real estate is opposed by the person who ought to pay it.

Next to the tax on personal property, the collateral inheritance tax is the most unpopular. It is heretofore the duty of a capitalist's lifetime should pay a tax after his death, when further concealment is impossible. It is the only way to make such accumulations pay a fair share to the State in this age of personal tax dodging. When Jay Gould died he left among other things $5,000,000 to his son, George J. Gould, and explained that it was a debt he owed Gould and not a bequest. The City and State Comptroller took the case to the court, which decided that the amount due the State under the collateral inheritance tax law was $80,771.94, in effect upholding the Gould contention.

The case was carried to the Court of Appeals, David B. Hill and Benjamin D. Passos appearing for the controllers and Delap, Hubbard & Price for Gould. The question was: Is the $5,000,000, alleged to be debt payable, exempt from the collateral inheritance tax? The Court of Appeals decided in the negative. It said by its decision that the contention in effect was an effort to evade the law. It holds that George Gould's claim that his father desired to pay him a salary of $500,000 for ten years is preposterous.

The tax had been fixed by the lower courts at $80,771.94. The Court of Appeals decided that the collateral inheritance tax on Gould's share should be $132,784.44, a sum to include a tax on the $5,000,000.

Former Senator Hill argued that the fact that the will gave George J. Gould $5,000,000 specifically made it a bequest, and that an intention that it was intended to pay a debt was immaterial. The Court of Appeals holds the same view.

A prairie fire moves faster than any horse can run. No matter how speedy your mount may be unless you have a good start of the fire it will overtake you. It is the same way with many diseases. Unless you get a fair start, you cannot possibly shake them off. The only hope for anyone who is threatened with serious disease is to start in time and seek safety before the danger closes in about him.

The best thing for you, if you feel that your full bodily energy is lacking, is to seek the strengthening, power-producing help of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which confers upon the digestive organs that keen zest of appetite and assimilation which transforms the food into nourishing, health-building blood, active muscular force, nervous energy and rugged endurance.

Do not wait until dyspepsia spreads into "liver complaint" and that turns into bronchial trouble which finally verges into consumption. Do not rely upon the delusive stimulus of malt extract and aerated drinks and oily compounds; do not allow a designing druggist who seeks only his own profit rather than your health to foist any "boom" medicine upon you. Insist upon the remedy which is backed by thirty years of steadily increasing sales to attest its constant usefulness and popularity.

The experience of Mr. Val Burkard, living at 65 Mohr Ave., Buffalo, N. Y., is given in his own words: "Five weeks ago I followed your advice and took two bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and also two vials of 'Pell's.' I consider myself entirely cured, as there have been no eruptions since I finished the last bottle. I think it is the greatest remedy on globe for blood and digestive disorders. My appetite increased wonderfully and I have also gained flesh. I would like everybody to know the true value of Dr. Pierce's medicines as I am confident by persistent use they will cure all ailments for which they are recommended."

I am satisfied that some dentist bungled greatly in operating upon my son's teeth, and that his death was due to improper treatment."

"I am the father" of the Waterbury Dental Company the young man in charge said. "When Crossman appeared here and asked to have his teeth attended to he was already bleeding from the gums. He was advised to go to a hospital for treatment."

Coroner Delap will continue his investigation into the cause of Judson Crossman's death to-day.

FAMILY TIES THROTTLE THE TRADESMEN'S BANK.

of the Clearing House. They now amount to $2,000,400. In this item the committee from the Clearing House found sufficient evidence of pecuniary dealing to warrant them in closing the bank. It is said that most of the loans are bad, and show a remarkable laxity on the part of the directors. Some of the promissory notes are said to be absolutely unsecured, and there are many for amounts as low as $25.

Morris J. Hirsch, counsel for the failed bank, said yesterday: "It is a question of valuation and judgments, and there is a big difference between the Clearing House Committee and the directors of the bank. We think the securities good, and you can say positively that the depositors will be paid in full."

Blames Boston Wool Men.
The officers of the bank refuse to make any statement except Cashier James W. MacNaughton, who attributes the failure of the bank to the fight made upon it by Boston wool merchants. President MacNaughton was asked yesterday by a Journal reporter to assure the public that depositors would be paid. He declined.

"I wish I could," he said, "but I can tell nothing now, and have nothing to say."

Members of the Clearing House do not believe that the bank will ever resume business.

The most serious blow to the prospects of the Tradesmen's Bank and, one which precipitated its failure, was the recent suspension of the Wool Exchange, of which Allan MacNaughton, brother of James, was president.

James MacNaughton is a son of William MacNaughton, formerly an agent of the Hudson Bay Company and a leading dealer in wool. When the MacNaughtons gained control of the Tradesmen's Bank three years ago they started out to use it to make New York the principal wool emporium of the world.

Under the leadership of several companies, whose leading officers were also officers of the bank.

The Hudson Bay Wool Exchange Building, at West Broadway and Beach street, was built and the bank moved into it. Allan MacNaughton was president of the Wool Exchange, and the other officers were Charles Fletcher, vice-president; A. W. Lightbourn, secretary, and D. H. Bates, treasurer.

The officers of the Tradesmen's Bank were: President, James MacNaughton; Cashier, James W. Clawson; vice-president, B. H. Bates.

Directors were: James MacNaughton, D. H. Bates, Clarence Whitman, A. Swan Brown, Julius Kaufmann, Thomas B. Carr, John A. Tweedy, William H. Woolverton, James W. Clawson, Charles R. Flint, Jerome E. Butts, James Rowland E. R. Pitkin, David M. Look and August C. Bonnell.

Many of these names are also to be found in the directories of the Wool Exchange, the New York Wool Warehouse Company and the Wool Record Publishing Company. It is rumored that many of the bad loans on the defunct bank's books are made to these companies. MacNaughton, president, lent money. It is said, to MacNaughton, president, his brother. It is rumored that funds of the bank were used to support the activities in which James MacNaughton was interested.

Cause of the Failure.
No one can be found who will state just what bad loans the bank made, but it is universally said that the failure of MacNaughton to realize his ambition and make New York the principal wool emporium caused the crash.

With the failure of the Wool Exchange came the suspension of the Wool Record and the failure of the Publishing Company. The bank of it, which was owned and controlled by the MacNaughtons. It is said that big loans were made by the bank through these concerns of wool, which depreciated greatly in value. Besides the money that went to support failing institutions, the bank's funds were advanced to commission agents upon wool as security.

The bank has been failing ever since the prices on wool became low and the industry unprofitable. President MacNaughton bore it all coolly. A recent scheme of his making was to absorb several smaller banks and incorporate the Tradesmen's Banking Company, with a capital of $5,000,000. The other banks were to be branches of the Tradesmen's. MacNaughton went to Albany, but the scheme fell through. At the time he said:

"We are too strong to have need of other banks. Our condition is perfectly secure and if there is any absorbing it will simply be because the Tradesmen's takes everything that comes its way and can take care of all of them."

Last February, through MacNaughton's efforts, the Clinton State Bank was merged into the Tradesmen's. The plan was that woolmen paid $300,000 for the capital stock, and as the stock was not at par the Tradesmen's is said to have lost $30,000 by the deal.

When the ventures of the MacNaughtons began to fail one after another wool dealers withdrew their money from the Tradesmen's, and it was this state of affairs that led the Clearing House Committee to step in. The bank was doing business regularly the day of the visit, and MacNaughton met the committee smiling, saying that he was about to suggest such an examination.

William MacNaughton, president of the New York Wool Warehouse Company, said yesterday: "This is an entirely independent and separate institution, and will not be affected by the failure of the bank."

He refused to give to a reporter for the Journal the names of the incorporators. He even declined to give his own name, but insisted that the company was an independent institution. A large portrait of James MacNaughton was hanging upon the wall while the president of the warehouse company was denying any connection with the bank.
